MEXICO PEACE MOVES ONWARD

President Wilson Describes the Prospects as "Entirely Satisfactory"

CONFERENCE NEAR AT SALTILO

Report of a Serious Breach Between Villa and Carranza

Washington, Aug. 1.—Administration officials yesterday expressed conviction that as soon as Provisional President Carranza's envoys arrived at Saltillo to confer with Carranza peace plans for Mexico would move speedily forward. They believed that the contentions of each faction will be satisfied and conditions rapidly agreed upon for the transfer of governments at Mexico City. President Wilson described the peace prospects as "entirely encouraging."

The president and his advisers believe that Villa, the constitutional general, will subscribe to the peace programme of his chief, Carranza. Recently there have been disquieting reports over Villa's attitude.

While the constitutional army continued its movement yesterday toward Mexico City, yet it was understood that the first result of the Saltillo conference would be the declaration of an armistice.

El Paso, Aug. 1.—Representatives of General Emiliano Zapata and Venustiano Carranza will confer within a few days regarding the attitude of Zapata toward the constitutional government, according to reliable reports received here yesterday. Zapata will take part possibly in the conference, which will be held at Valle de Santiago, state of Guanajuato. Constitutional officials announced yesterday that several Carranza generals are already on their way to the meeting place.

Two state capitals near Mexico City have been evacuated by the federal army, according to official messages from Saltillo to constitutionalists here yesterday. Pachuca, capital of the state of Hidalgo, and Queretaro, capital of the state of the same name, have both been deserted by the federal garrisons, who have gone to Mexico City.

There was no military movement yesterday indicating that General Villa, the northern divisional commander, had decided to break away from the Carranza party. So far as could be learned here he had not yet started his army southward from Chihuahua state.

MYSTERY WOMAN IN BAILEY MURDER

Makes Secret Call on Husband of Slain
Woman—District Attorney Is Interested.

Hempstead, L. I., Aug. 1.—For three hours Thursday night a woman disclosed to William D. Bailey and his family what is believed to be valuable information relative to the murder of Mrs. Bailey in the home of Dr. Edwin Carman at Freeport. Much mystery was made over the identity of this woman, but District Attorney Smith, who was informed of her call by Mr. Bailey, said he would interview her yesterday, and perhaps obtain a most important affidavit.

Mr. Bailey was called on his telephone late Thursday by a woman who said she had vital information concerning the murder and would like to call at his home and speak with him, if she could be certain her identity would not be revealed.

MILLS ON SHORT TIME.
Drop in Cotton Causes Curtailment in Fall River.

Fall River, Mass., Aug. 1.—Following the report of closing of the exchanges, including the Cotton Exchange, a movement to inaugurate a short time running schedule by the mills here was begun. Over a dozen plants were stopped for the week last night. Plans for operating after this week have not been formulated yet. With the drop in cotton, prices of goods began to tumble. There was a strong inclination among many of the manufacturers to go on short time, and this inclination was crystallized by the morning's developments yesterday in outside markets.

HOME RULE AGREE- MENT REPORTED

Belfast Dispatch Says One Has Been Reached Satisfactory to Ulsterites.

London, Aug. 1.—A dispatch from Belfast yesterday reports that an agreement has been reached in the home rule situation which is satisfactory to the Ulsterites.

Owing to the serious nature of the impending European war the second of the amending bill to the home rule measure has been postponed until the situation clears, but it is probable that it may be dropped altogether and that the home rule bill will go on the statute book when parliament is prorogued, about Aug. 15.

Bonar Law, leader of the opposition, and Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster leader, held a conference privately with Premier Asquith yesterday with a request to postpone the amending home rule bill that the Unionists might consider their position.

MISS GOELET DEAD. Victim of Automobile Accident in New York.

New York, Aug. 1.—Miss Gladys Goelet of No. 2 Sanford street, Boston, one of an automobile party of three women and two men died in a hospital yesterday of injuries sustained early yesterday morning when she jumped from the rapidly moving machine which had caught fire. Her neck was broken.

Miss Goelet, her sister, Miss Jessie Goelet and her aunt, Mrs. Flora Prevost, accepted the invitation of two men to return to New York from City Island in the car. The two men were held by the police pending an inquest.

The Corner Stone of Health.
This is the cornerstone of our new health policy; a higher standard of living through more efficient industry and more fruitful commerce.

But greater wealth of material things is not enough. There is essential, in the second place, political democracy, a utilitarian doctrine that each must count for one and that the happiness of all men was of equal importance. A military despotism might have its achievements in public health. I do not forget Cuba under military occupation or the Panama canal zone, and I have seen great things accomplished by similar means in emergencies in San Francisco, and in Dayton.

But the new health of a national ideal can never be achieved or held by despotism, however benevolent. It rests upon public education and common consent. The individual who endangers others must indeed be controlled and the expert must be trusted; but always upon a democratic basis, subject to recall, tested by reasonable tests, justifying himself before a critical and informed public opinion.

One thing more is essential besides economic progress and democratic quality. There is essential a sense of social solidarity, of mutual responsibility, of the reality that society is one, that men are brethren, that we are members one of another, that avarice, misery, crime, injustice, ignorance and disease are literally and actually matters of common concern. I have fallen into the old manner of speech. Let us say rather that prosperity, justice, health, the knowledge which is power, material and spiritual well-being, are matters of common concern.—Edward T. Devine in The Survey.

BUYING OFF A REBEL

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.

John Noyes, farmer, had lived to be forty-five years old without finding much to kick at. He had a good wife, good health, and he made a profit every year.

Sometimes when election came around he drove to the polls and voted, and sometimes he didn't. He had no interest in politics. He belonged to a certain party because his father and grandfather had. If his party won out all right; if it lost all right. It was nothing to the farmer's gain either way.

Take it all in all, John Noyes was as content as any man in America, and when he happened to think of it he said to his wife:

"I guess it's a pretty good country to live in."

And they went right along believing that and wondering why other folks kicked until one fatal night when a tin peddler was taken in as a guest. The peddler was a man of gab outside of the gab he had to use in his business. He was also a politician, or thought he was. He likewise boasted that he was a Socialist of the deepest dye, and he carried with him and handed out to whoever would take them a stock of pamphlets entitled:

"Are You a Slave?" "Is Freedom a Myth?" "Did Our Grandfathers Die in Vain?" "Will You Tamefully Submit to the Yoke?"

That evening the peddler told John Noyes and his wife some things to make them gasp, and he had the documents to back up what he said.

This was a government composed of a few rich men, and they were sworn to let the poor man get a fair living.

All the judges were bought and sold. The great burden of taxation was borne by the poor.

The rich were entirely to blame for the high cost of living.

Let a rich man steal $100,000 and the judge let him off with a mild reprimand and divided the plunder with him.

Let a poor man steal a frostbitten potato for his starving children and he was sent to prison for thirty years.

There was much more of the stuff, and when the farmer and his wife had read and heard they were agast.

The farmer had been placid and content for long years. He had had little to worry him, and no one could remember when he had been seen to lose his temper. Such a man goes all to pieces when the change comes. He slept very little that night, and next morning he did not go to work. He sat down to read those pamphlets through and through. He got worked up as he read.

He exclaimed: he swore; he felt blood-thirsty; he pounded with his fist.

"I wouldn't get all het up over it," said the wife as he finally got up and stamped around.

"But them durned rich men, Martha!"

"I know, but mebbe they can't help it."

"And them blamed tyrants!"

"They haven't tried to boss us any."

"And them judges!"

"But we don't have any lawsuits."

"I tell you, Martha, the people are being driven to desperation, and the cry for blood will soon be heard all over the land!"

"Well, we'll stay home and mind our business."

Once started on the wrongs of the people, John Noyes was a fanatic. He could talk of nothing else. He began planning how to right those wrongs. He finally sent a communication to the county paper reciting the wrongs of the people and offering himself as a leader in the movement to redress them. He defied the powers of the United States and went so far as to dare the government to arrest him. The spark needed to fire the country would be struck when a nation of the tyrant at Washington laid hands on him.

After his deft John Noyes loaded his shotgun and retired to a straw stack to wait for recruits and the army of the United States. Neither the recruits nor the army came.

"Better give it up, John, and go back to the cornfield," advised his wife.

"But I'm here to help redress the wrongs."

"But it looks as if the people didn't want them redressed, and that corn needs hoeing mighty bad."

The farmer held out for another day and might have made it a day and a half had not Deacon Travis, who lived a mile away, come over to say:

"Hey, John, I don't want this country all mused up just now."

"But the tyrants must be wiped out," was the reply.

"I know, but don't wipe 'em jest now. Put it off another year."

"I don't see how I can."

"John, you have a bull calf you wanted to trade me for a hog. The hog is worth two of the calf, but if you are a mind to give this thing up we'll call it an even trade."

"I might do it," was the doubtful reply.

"Of course you will," said the wife.

"I hate to, deacon, but seeing it's you, and seeing the people have not rallied to throw off their chains, and since the United States don't attack me, and since that durned tin peddler—"

And the trade was made and the rebellion put down.

COTTON CROP REPORT.

Condition Was 76.4 Per Cent of Normal on July 25.

Washington, Aug. 1.—The crop reporting board of the department of agriculture, in a cotton crop report issued yesterday, estimated that the condition of the crop on July 25 was 76.4 per cent of normal, compared with 79.6 per cent on July 23, 1913, and 80 per cent the average for 10 years past on July 25.

THE CHARM OF MOTHERHOOD

Enhanced By Perfect Physical Health.

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at such times, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when it is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under the right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, and with ample time in which to prepare, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

Every woman at this time should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

BUSINESS AND THE SCHOOLS.
Movement for Practical Education Stimulated from Industrial Side.

That the present movement for practical education is stimulated from the industrial rather than from the educational side is a fact both promising and disquieting, according to Owen R. Lovejoy, who discusses "Vocational Guidance and Child Labor" in a publication of the United States bureau of education.

"The employers have a very definite program," says Mr. Lovejoy. "They know what they want and are going after it. Let us not delude ourselves by thinking they are actuated by philanthropy. It is simply good business. They want a crop of fresh, young labor furnished them every year than can make fewer mistakes and more profits."

"This is extremely gratifying, in one sense. It indicates that economic self-interest is attempting to shake off the double burden of society has long borne—the burden of using good work much less than they cost because poorly and inefficiently made, and of supporting by charity those paid less than their work is worth because of their poverty, inefficiency and consequent helplessness."

While employers are awake to the need of efficiency, industry is not. Industry still beckons to the inefficient, the immature, the unprepared.

"Society is far from having reached a decision that unskilled labor must be abolished. The occupations which, outside of agriculture, absorb the output of our schools are barren of any element to make them of present interest to the child or to offer any hope for the future. A vocational survey in New York City exhibits in one group 101 boys between 14 and 16 years of age with an analysis of the work they are doing. For only five of them is there any opportunity to advance or improve; 96 are in dead-end occupations."

"Business is now saying that if we had the right kind of schools all this would be changed; that child labor would become a blessing instead of an abuse for children. We are constantly told that, if the schools had the right kind of curriculum and gave the right kind of training, every child would have his natural capacity developed, and we should speedily put an end to the army of industrial misfits."

"In accepting this challenge of the business world our educators have assumed an enormous responsibility for the condition that exists. A study of the annual contribution of our city schools to the business interests of the community will show that a considerable percentage is thrown into the discard within the first month; that an other large percentage goes drifting from job to job, sometimes advancing, quite as frequently receding, the industries are complaining that the children the schools turn out are no good; and that the children lose courage, enthusiasm and youthful idealism in the various meaningless jobs to which they are assigned. That many drift into casual and thence into permanent idleness is to be expected. The only wonder is that any ultimately rise to positions of efficiency and responsibility."

"Our schools are not fair to themselves in assuming that they or the child are wholly at fault. If the schools need better curriculum, so do the industrial establishments. If the child needs a more definite and purposeful mind, much more does industry. One of the most vital services vocational guidance can render is to analyze our industries and train our youth to distinguish between a vocation and a job. It is futile to give special training to a child for the purpose of fastening him to a machine on which he shall do purely mechanical labor for life. Business says: 'Here are the jobs; what kind of children have you to offer?' We must reverse the inquiry and say to business: 'Here are our children; what kind of industry have you to offer?'"
